On Wednesday 18 September 2013, Women's Aid groups across Scotland took part in our annual 24 hour census to identify how many women, children and young people were supported on that day, in refuge or through outreach and on-call support services.

Women's Aid groups provide range of services that are tailored to meet the complex safety and support needs of women, children, and young people throughout Scotland who experience domestic abuse.

Of the 1,128 women, children and young people that contacted Women's Aid on this day*:

499

needed emotional support

941

received practical support with housing, safety planning, finances, and access to legal protection

183

sought general information about domestic abuse or Women's Aid services

On this one day...

82 women and 12 children and young people contacted Women's Aid for the first time. They were most likely to hear about Women's Aid through friends, police, health, and social services

55 children and young people received support even though their mums were not being supported by Women's Aid. They found out about Women's Aid through school counsellors, school-based awareness activities, and social work services.

37 women (and their 22 children) requested refuge. Only five women (and their four children) were accommodated. 51 percent of women and their children seeking refuge were turned away due to lack of safe or suitable space.

There were no easy options for women who couldn't get into refuge; about half of the women were able to stay with friends or family or get temporary emergency accommodation via their local authority. 11 women and their six children returned home until suitable space became available.

What Women's Aid groups do...

Refuge accommodation

Provide protection, sanctuary, shelter and a safe haven for women, children and young people who have to leave their home because of domestic abuse.

Moving on from refuge – Follow on resettlement support services

Supporting women, children and young people with the transition to a new home, school and community.

Outreach services – working in the community

Outreach services are provided to women experiencing domestic abuse who are living in the community rather than in refuge. This can range from providing individual support to women, to providing a drop-in service at a local health centre.

Information

Women's Aid groups provide information on women's housing options, benefits entitlement and legal rights and support women to access legal advice locally. Women can access this service in person by calling into the local Women's Aid's office or by telephone.

Advocacy

Advocacy support covers everything from safety planning for a woman and her children, accompanying women to the police or housing departments, registering with a G.P., enrolling children and young people at a new school and supporting them through legal action and the court system. It also includes helping women and her children to access multi-agency support when needed.

Training and awareness raising

Developing the understanding of people working in front-line services who will come into contact on a daily basis with women who are experiencing domestic abuse. Women's Aid groups also provide sessions in school to raise awareness of domestic abuse, promote healthy and respectful relationships, and to provide information about how to access the children and young people's outreach service.

Children and young people's services

Dedicated services are provided to children and young people in their own right, mirroring those provided to their mothers. Children's support workers work with children and young people in refuge, and when they move into their new home and also provide an outreach service to children and young people in the community.
